RESEARCH PROFILE

Social scientist and PhD candidate in Development Economics. My research focusses on small enterprises, natural disasters and climate change in developing countries. I have been the coordinator of three data collections of manufacturing enterprises in Mozambique (2017, 2019, 2022), which included a quantitative survey, field experiments and qualitative research methods. My first co-authored articles are published in World Development and the Journal of Development Studies. I am currently visiting the Centre for the Study of African Economies (CSAE) at the University of Oxford and will submit my PhD-dissertation in December 2022.

EDUCATION

TEACHING ACTIVITIES

I have taught a lecture on Mixed Methods in the MSc in Global Development. I was teaching assistant for the courses “Applied Research Methods” and “Economic Growth and Inequality” of the MSc in Global Development at the University of Copenhagen.

DISSEMINATION

I have disseminated my research and knowledge about development in policy reports and on social media. I have contributed to two reports on manufacturing firms in Mozambique and Myanmar. The report on manufacturing firms in Mozambique was officially launched at a one-day event open to the public, and was covered by local media. I publish research results on my personal Twitter account, and write publications about the enterprise data collection in Mozambique in name of the Development Economics Research Group on Twitter, LinkedIn and Instagram.
